I am totally against the state of Delaware mandating that 100% of the new vehicles sold in Delaware by 2035 must be electric vehicles. Unless the electric company is able to produce 100% of the electricity that it supplies to us without using any fossil fuels (coal, natural gas, etc.) there will still be CO2 emissions, they just won't be coming out of a vehicle tailpipe. This is a very hypocritical, government power grab that will end up stressing our power grid and leading to much higher costs of electricity used in our homes. Having only one source of power for any of our energy needs is a very bad idea, making us more susceptible to future catastrophes.
