I highly oppose this action. It is something that is from a state agency, not from an elected official representing the public. While it may be an executive action from the governor, that is still not a public mandate. Anything of this consequence to the citizens of Delaware merits a true vote, as with a referendum, for example. The regulations are unhelpful to the majority of citizens of the state. Using California as a model is ridiculous. The west coast state, currently a morass of over-reaching regulation, crime, anti-business atmosphere is NOT something to base actions of this magnitude upon the citizens of our small, east coast state which has a population far different from California. I have attended a meeting and found the arguments against this far more compelling. It is not just Delaware that does not come close to having the needed infrastructure ready to support this. The burden to many, if not most, segments of the population are onerous and plainly unfair.
