Comment / Question: I strongly oppose the proposed regulations requiring electric vehicles and eliminating my choice to buy a traditional gas powered vehicle. Delaware's electric grid and supply can not meet the demand to charge all these cars in such a short period. The expense is burdensome to the average consumer, especially considering that the batteries only last a 100,000 miles. Then there is the environmental consequences of all the retired batteries. Access to charging will not be equatable low income and some middle income people. Electric cars may be fine for some people but do not meet many people's requirements. There are many more reasons not to go through with this mandate. Please stop and reevaluate this action. Let the market dictate what is desirable.
