Who really thinks that following California's lead to require all vehicles sold in Delaware must be electric by 2035? No one, here or across the country, is asking the hard questions. Where will the precious metals required for the batteries in these vehicles come from? Where will the batteries come from? When those batteries no longer hold a charge, how will they be disposed of? How will this country fight a war if we go to all-electric vehicles? There won't be any charging stations on the battle field. The answer to the first two questions will most likely be communist China. Does the US want to be beholden to the communists?
