I do not live in California, therefore as a resident of THIS State I should not have to abide by California standards. I live in rural Kent County Delaware. There are NO electrical charging stations anywhere near where I live or where I travel. The electrical grid in this State cannot withstand every resident utilizing electrical charging through their residences. Until this State provides additional information to its residents as to how adding these charging stations will increase their home electrical use costs, of the availability of how they will be provided this should not be forced down our throats. How are you going to get all the people without garages an electrical charging station? Are you going to offer subsidies to the elderly, the low income, the disabled? Is that coming out of my tax dollars, therefore costing me more as a resident? Are there going to be tax rebates? If so, how much are you going to offer to offset additional costs? Do I have to be a homeowner in order to take advantage of that offset? We are NOT prepared for this issue, certainly NOT prepared for this to be FORCED upon us!
