I believe adopting this regulation is premature. The Delaware electric grid will not be able to handle the additional power needed to power additional cars. In addition since I am a camper there is not an electric car right now that will be able to tow without stopping frequently to recharge. It will also be regressive on people with a fixed budget since electric cars are not affordable now. Also what do you do during a hurricane/storm that causes extended power outages? You will be stuck. we should adopt a more gradual approach and let the technology catch up
