I am not ready to make the transition to electric vehicles. Only when the infrastructure is ready to support faster charging and the availability of the components necessary to manufacture sufficient batteries should this change. Imposing a change too early like this impacts the freedom of choice for consumers without sufficient evidence to support a need. Forcing people to change, invites resistance without evidence that I will benefit from this change. My electric bill is already increasing because of inflation and I want the freedom to choose options for my transportation costs. Everyone forced to make this change knows that the other increased costs will come down the road when government feels the pinch to pay for road taxes and must tax electric vehicle owners to make up for the gasoline highway tax loss.
