Add me to the many others who are opposed to the proposed ACC II regulations. If someone wants to purchase a ZEV, that should be their choice, but for the state to mandate an increasing percentage of them is short-sighted, unwise, and most likely unconstitutional.

- It is short-sighted because there is no way Delaware and all other states to which we might travel will have the necessary charging stations in place.
- It is unwise because the process to obtain needed minerals and to manufacture batteries is very damaging to our environment.
- And it is most likely unconstitutional for such an enormous mandate to be decided by unelected government employees.

There are other points that could be made in opposition, but I will summarize by saying I object very strongly to this proposed regulation, and I believe a large majority of Delawareans agree with that opinion.
