Delaware's clean energy program is not comprehensive and appears to focus only on measures that are costly or inconvenient to the public. The Low emission program is only one example. The state govt wants the public to buy electric cars, while at the same time permitting the construction of huge warehouse facilities that will have hundreds of trucks spewing exhaust into the air. We can not purchase common plants like English Ivy, but the planning/zoning commissions allow green space to disappear with the construction of McMansion developments all over the state. We can't use plastic bags, but our roadways are the most disgusting I've seen in years, because litterers are not ticketed because our police rarely make traffic stops. It makes little sense to have different govt agencies with various agendas. Meanwhile, there is no focus on small things that could make a difference, that anyone can do, such as hanging out laundry, or turning your air conditioner up a few degrees.
