If the state wants to do good for its citizens, it should look for a better way to create support for any action. Forcing a change in the people will not create support. I believe that first, the legislature should create the rules. And executive fiat from the executive branch is not the correct way to accomplish changes. That said, the executive branch can show initiative and leadership by making changes to how the state government works. Instead of forcing electric vehicles on the people, what about making all government vehicles and equipment electric? By doing this, the government will show leadership and promote change in the state. I oppose this mandate and respectfully ask Governor Carney to consider my suggestion.
