We are not to the point in the country where we can walk away from combustion engines. There is little to no infrastructure set it up to deliver electric for these cars and trucks. Transportation must remain affordable for all, lower income families cannot afford to buy $100,000 electric cars and still feed your families and live in a house. However well-intentioned the Green community may be there is reality to deal with. If you are still using tons of oil and gas to produce the electric where is the savings? It is utterly ridiculous to believe that the state of Delaware can enforce such a measure and interfere in your personal life. My choice of vehicles should be my choice and not dictated by the state of Delaware.

Thank you
