Dear Ms. Newman,

I am totally opposed to the mandate that is being considered and the imposition of the state's manipulation of the marketplace regarding electric vehicles. There are so many unintended consequences that it is impossible to understand how this could even be considered. When electric cars are right for me, I will buy one. The state has no right to make that decision for me.

The used car market would be out of sight, and poor people would be affected the most, but what I find truly unbelievable is that our state would continue to work so quickly toward an all electric power source when the electric grid is definitely not keeping up with what is expected of it in places where this has been tried.

In addition, it is truly an immensely dangerous thing for our country as a whole to put all our power needs into one source that is so easily sabotaged now, as we have seen recently. Isn't anyone thinking about this?

Sincerely,

Charlotte Lenzen
