It is unfathomable to me that any governmental body would want to emulate anything being done by a failed state like California, but here we are. I am vehemently opposed to this policy change. What are you thinking?? We don't have the infrastructure to support mass ownership of EVs; they are cost-prohibitive to purchase and maintain; SLAVE CHILD LABOR is used to mine the rare earth minerals necessary to create the batteries; we will be beholden to China to manufacture them; the batteries are astronomically expensive to replace, and they cannot be recycled. How do you expect people who live in the city to charge them?? I'm just astounded by the short-sightedness of this nonsense. Grow up and focus on more immediate things like the nasty liquid Artesian is trying to pass off as water that is barely potable.
