The batteries can't be replaced. Financially, owning an EV is not beneficial. Producing these batteries is neither environmentally sound, nor humane. No one, in a hurricane corridor will be able to evacuate, in a timely fashion. The grid could never handle charging EVs, if we all drove them. They explode, from overheating. Where I live, it's over 110 degrees in the summer, so the desert remains fossil fueled. What else? Oh. OPEC opposes EVs. So, no one has to concern themselves that we'll be forced to purchase them.
