It is irresponsible to even consider a mandate for full EVs when the technology has not being finalized, there is not a suitable charging or battery recycling infrastructure in place, and EVs are priced outside of most citizen's budgets. One of the distinctions of the United States of America and what has made the country great is a capitalistic form of economy. The market and customer demand should mandate products not the government! A mandate that affects all citizens without lawfully elected representation is doubly concerning. Plus little Delaware has no where close to the population and vehicles as California. Delaware lawmakers need to make laws for Delawareans!
