This program makes no sense because the cost of these vehicles and the batteries they require are cost-prohibitive for most people as is installation of a home charging system, and there are so many technical issues and hazards that are not even being addressed. There are woefully few public charging stations in this state which has a lot of rural residents. Further, no one is addressing the fact that the production of the batteries for these vehicles is not environment-friendly and neither is their disposal. The DNREC works for we, the people, not the other way around.
