I am in favor of increasing electric car use. I am concerned however that these mandates are not realistic given the number of and accessibility of charging stations currently available. The median income in Delaware would likely leave many citizens in a position where they could not own a car making it difficult navigate a city with poor public transport. Building the infrastructure necessary to handle more electric cars should be carefully considered. Adding better transportation (electric light rail or trains) into Wilmington from communities and to beaches and the airport would significantly reduce traffic on the road and emissions from cars sitting idle in traffic jams.
