Comments:

Continue sale of gas powered vehicles in Delaware due to the worldwide scarcity of precious resources, instead of favoring electrical vehicles. A basic economic concept is at play. The United States primarily depends on imports of foreign materials required in the chemical components lithium, manganese, cobalt, graphite, steel, and nickel from foreign sources. It makes better sense to allow consumer choice to drive the market and incentivize manufacturers toward continued innovation in gas-powered vehicles. American self-reliance on all or most of our domestic product ensures that the US economy may better withstand pressures from global competition for scarce resources.
