As a former Republican, I understand those who are opposed to government regulation on controlling EV availability, however, we all need to be responsive to the threat posed by global warming. It would be nice to allow the free market system opportunity to exert gradual control over this matter. But, scientists all over the globe are increasing their expression of concern regarding looming disasters from rising heat levels including rising oceans. The seriousness of this matter requires faster and surer reactions from governments. If we fail to take dramatic actions as is the low-emissions vehicle program, our grown kids and grandkids will look back at this generation and wonder what the heck were we thinking. Our actions also serve as an example to other nations who will have the opportunity to take similar stances in their countries. We must lead the way whenever possible.
