This is wrong on so many accounts. Besides the government forcing this on the public without a vote, the facts are that it will have little effect on improving the environment, is not feasible, expensive, misguided, and possibly even more damaging to our planet. Consider the mining of all the elements needed to produce an electric vehicle battery, the energy needed to mine and produce the batteries, the storage of the batteries, the danger of the batteries, the disposal of used batteries, the strain on the power grids, the cost of purchase and the cost of adapting a home....it all adds up to a disaster. And I didn't even mention the inconvenience to the drivers and public. Why a mandate? If you are truly concerned about the pollution generated by autos consider encouraging the purchase of Hybrids without the drastic step of demanding the public buy something not wanted and not needed. The last thing our little state needs to follow this crazy California mandate. I am a native Delawarean and a registered Independent so there is no political agenda in my comments, just common sense.
