I am very much opposed to mandated deadlines for selling electric powered vehicles. Where will the power come from to charge them? Fossil fuels will be required - there's no way solar or wind power can create enough electricity. Think about the logjams to power up the cars. Right now you can fill a car in 10 minutes with enough fuel to drive 300 miles.

Let the market take its course. If the electric vehicles are cost-efficient and in total (including producing the electricity) reduce emissions, let the public move toward it naturally.

Mandates are unconscionable.
