I support the effort to transition to non-fossil fuels. However, the transition plan is key. We can move forward with haste without creating hardship. The artificial timeline is unnecessary. Climate change is SLOOOOW. We have many more than 10 years to respond. And to proceed at this rate while BILLIONS of people around the world are still burning coal, the impact of our efforts will be minimal. Delaware is not California. We have seen what this plan has already done to that state. And our climate is not nearly as friendly. Mandates are a bad idea. The money we spend rushing to convert to an industry in its infancy, could be better spent elsewhere.
