Although I am not opposed to Electric Vehicles I am opposed to the idea that buying an electric vehicle is mandatory by our government. Can our electrical grid handle this increase strain? Where are the charging stations going to be? The infrastructure for this massive change is no where near capable of this influx of electric vehicles. Increasing our electrical needs will result in more fuel being used to generate electricity thus more pollution. How about making more efficient fossil burning cars? Or using better catalytic converters? Seems this would be a much easier solution to environmental concerns.
