EVs have been scientifically proven to not be a good alternative to gasoline powered vehicles because of the impact on fossil fuels used to power the electricity required to charge the car batteries. In addition to that, we know that the raw materials mined to create the batteries harms the earth. When the batteries are used up, they do not break down fully and leak dangerous chemicals back into the ground further damaging the environment. Until a better alternative to gas cars, we should stay with what we know the consequences are for the use rather than embark on an alternative that is already showing negative impact on the environment and where will have to learn long term what impact the EV alternative has that we cannot foresee today.
