Comments:

Regarding electronic vehicles, the amount of cadmium needed to build the batteries is enormous. Having people without the proper research done on this is inappropriate and forcing us to comply with an electronic vehicle, not only discriminate against those who cannot afford one, puts people like me who travel for business in an extreme inconvenience to putting me out of business when I don't have time in emergency cases to sit for 40 minutes to charge a vehicle. The waste and ongoing fires in these types of vehicles has been enormous. The research is incomplete. A law which forces people without a proper public vote is inappropriate and a dictatorship. And those who cannot apply due to financial or other obligations, are being punished by the state of Delaware.
