The government should not be mandating what tax paying citizens decide to purchase or drive. The infrastructure is not in place, California doesn't even have it in place. Why would anyone follow California over the cliff? Auto makers are already working on Hydrogen powered cars which is less intrusive on the environment. The mining of materials to make batteries is destroying the areas that mine it. When was the last power plant built?? but yet you want to use more electric. I believe your just following a trend and trends come and go but your left with the bad decision and the mess to clean up. Look at the propane car. This was rushed into, and do you see them on the road now? Please take a pause, slow down and let things catch up. The early bird is not going to get the worm but will waste time and money for a mandate that 90% of folks that pay your salaries don't want. Thank You
