Comments:

This benighted program should be rejected in its entirety. Even for Delaware, it represents the grossest form of state overreach. People should have the right to choose whether to purchase an electric vehicle, based on all available information (including the source of energy needed to power the necessary charging stations and the source of supply of replacement batteries). The decision should not be imposed on consumers by either DNREC or the General Assembly. These proposed regulations illustrate the intellectual bankruptcy of the "green new deal" movement.
