As an advocate of free market capitalism, i much prefer to see the market drive demand. If electric vehicles are made to be attractive to the market through better, more efficient and convenient features that appeal to the consumer, the consumer will buy that product. But to force feed anything into the market creates resent and premature implementation of technology with unknown and unforeseen consequences. Most notable today are two important factors...unstable battery technology that leads to fires and unpredictable supply of rare earth materials which at this point is not widely available in domestic resources. I am not saying electric is a bad idea...i am saying government imposing its will over public sentiment is very much a bad idea.
