Comments:

I oppose wind turbines because they are prone to failure, which can lead to catastrophic consequences for our coastlines and marine life. Just look at Nantucket, where a single blade has broken apart, causing widespread damage. Eventually, either through defects, storms, or simply wear and tear, these turbines will fail. Do we want fiberglass shards strewn across our beaches, deterring people from enjoying a barefoot stroll? Do we want whales to die from ingesting these fragments? And do we truly want to witness these events from the shore? Furthermore, wind turbines are not financially viable unless they receive federal support. If a different administration decides to cut funding, the companies will no longer operate at a loss, leading to a significant increase in electricity prices or their bankruptcy. This would result in a disaster for our communities, as the turbines would cease maintenance, leaving our coastlines vulnerable.
