Any farmer who complains about crop damage from deer and yet does not allow qualified hunters to take advantage of all the available crop damage tags at the state will provide for the farmer shouldn't be worried about the coyote taking care of the deer eating his crops. What I have learned in my 60 years or so of hunting has that money talks and the rest of the hunters are looking for a place to hunt game. They have politicized and glamorized the big buck business image and therefore diluted the true meaning of hunting being in the outdoors and bringing something home to eat.
