I think it is important to continue to allow acts of paddling and deploying baits from shore by recreational fisherman because for many generations it has been a traditional form of fishing, a way of getting large families together who may not be able to fish by boat. It's also a great way for those who are physically incapable of casting to deploy baits into the waters, and it's been an important attraction that's created lots of revenue for the state parks for many years. I speak for not just myself, but many other fisherman when I say, the precious moments spent with our families on the beach fishing cost more than any catches weight in gold.
