Kyle,

I am writing regarding the Clean Car standards. I'm unable to attend a workshop however, I would like to provide my input.

I personally do not agree with forcing everyone to go to all electric cars. The cars are very expensive and from what I understand replacement parts are outrageous and hard to find. My family travels frequently and the idea of having to stop and find a charging station doesn't appeal to me.

Then on the other hand what happens when there are high usage time and you're told to conserve electricity. What then - a dead battery? The price of electricity is high enough now we're going to have to use more to charge vehicles??

In this economy electric cars are not feasible for everyone. I'm all for those who can afford the electric cars and choose to buy one. My problem is I shouldn't be forced to purchase one. I currently do my part where I can to help protect our environment.
