I am a Delaware resident. I am against this plan to ban gasoline cars. I don't want an electric car. There are too many problems with them that have not been addressed. Gasoline cars are cheaper, efficient, and easy to fix -the same cannot be said about electric cars. Plus, nobody is discussing creating a new source of power production to accommodate the added strain on our electric grid. If we force an unnatural transition to electric cars, how much will utility bills for homes increase due to cars using our outdated power system? Switzerland is considering banning charging vehicles now because their power grid can not produce the needed power. I am against forcing consumers like myself to buy a type of vehicle we don't want, and I am against doing so when you're not also discussing the need to build the necessary infrastructure to power these vehicles. I am against it.
