I do not support this program and believe while we should be conscience of being good wards of the plant we should do in a responsible manner and not cause harm to our current environment and hardship on people to be forced to convert to expensive electric cars. The electric grids are not built to support a massive change in the auto industry and needs to have a goal established to support this new environment. I work with a lot of young people that can only afford used cars in this current environment. I can not imaging the difficulty they would have if the government heavy hand in manipulating the auto environment placing undue hardship on their current life style. The government needs to step back and be responsible to take in all aspects of this industry and avoid jamming this undue hardship down everyone's throat only to be politically acceptable to the progressives running our government. California is a financially broke State that we are all subsidizing today and they do not care about how it will impact them financially because we are like parents coming to rescue their children when they need financial support. They have brown outs and black outs today and do not care how this will impact that aspect….. because they will go to Congress (Parents) and get support to compensate for their poor choices.

Move in the right direction but be smart about it.

Concerned,

Tom O'Brien
