I am against another mandate by Carney, directing an agency to pursue the electric vehicle push in Delaware. Where is the vote by the public. More under the table, dictatorial moves.

As a Delaware resident I am against another gov't rabbit chase.

As a retired fire instructor, I am against the mandatory implementation of electric cars, the technology should still be considered dangerous.

As a conservationist I am against the electric car mandates, the electric grid is not capable of handling the load as evident of recent electric distribution failures. Where will the DEPENDABLE electric power come from?

What is the plan when a natural disaster hits the area, and thousands of residents can't evacuate due to less than fully charged vehicles. The roads will become hopelessly clogged with battery depleted electric cars, in effect putting all the residents of Delaware in danger. Do recall the advise to keep your gas tank full, just in case. How will that work with electric cars? Not well I am sure.
